Background

In 2007, the School underwent a re-branding exercise using the graphic design consultants Tayburn.

A logo was established which was designed to sit within the University of Edinburgh corporate brand. The School of Informatics has been using its own distinct visual identity from then on.

This has reflected a view within the School that Informatics has its own unique identity and vision, one which falls within the University of Edinburgh but also separate, particularly when it comes to the interface between the School and its relationship with industry.
The Informatics logo should be used on all documents and printed materials.

Our distinctive Informatics logo should only be used with the University of Edinburgh corporate logo.

A variant of the logo with the University crest on top is also available below.

/ Spacing requirements for horizontal and vertical variants.
The design for secondary logos reflects the University guidelines and can be used for specific units, programmes or projects within the School of Informatics. Horizontal and vertical variants are available (see next page).

Recommendation

Please note that School of Informatics is not using the University-wide format for the secondary logo used by most other schools.

The format the School is using combines the University corporate logo with the distinctive Informatics logo.

All materials where logo appears should be reviewed; out-of-date logo should be replaced with the primary Informatics logo specified in this document.

The Communications team should be consulted for further guidance.
