

Teaching Programme Review: Subject Specific Remit

Our teaching programme review (TPR) will take place in 2019. The guidance on the TPR (and the postgraduate version) is here: <https://www.ed.ac.uk/academic-services/quality/monitoringandreview/teaching-and-postgraduate-programme-review/general-information> We need to define the TPR team, get appropriate student involvement and start discussions on the subject specific remit. This is the definition of the remit the School would like the reviewers to consider in addition to the standard remit.

Quoting from the guidance:

In addition to the University remit each review will include specific issues proposed primarily by the School/Subject Area including student-generated items. These items should be discussed with College prior to the remit meeting. Schools/Subject Areas and Students are asked to propose a maximum of 2 items each for discussion and agreement of the most appropriate item. It is most practical to suggest a short, focused list to which the review can do justice within the constraints of the review visit.

The goal of this item is to consider candidate items for the School-specific remit.
